No Place for Technicalities

The partisan squabble over service ballots that has flared up again, this time over a technicality about what kind of a writing implement must be used to mark Ohio's ballots, should be settled immediately according to the only reliable rule for guidance throughout this whole difficult problem.

This is the rule that everything possible must be done to give service voters a chance to register their decisions in this year's wartime election and to register them in such a way that no legal complications will result. Therefore, without delay, Ohio must do whatever needs to be done to assure service voters who mark ballots in evident good faith that their votes will be counted, regardless of what kind of writing implement they use. This is no place for technicalities.

Chronic Weakness

The statement by Undersecretary of State Stettinius on reasons why the proceedings at Dumbarton Oaks will not be made public does not satisfy. His explanation that it would be discourteous to the other governments and his assurance that no binding commitments will be made without opportunity for public discussion do not settle the grievance which has been revived by the meeting at Dumbarton Oaks.

The fault does not lie with Mr. Stettinius, or even with Secretary of State Hull, but with a curious situation in which the United States is taking leadership in formulating policy on international matters without the benefit of an informed and resolute public opinion. The question is not so much where the conference on post-war security at Dumbarton Oaks is leading to, but where the United States on its part is aiming to reach in connection with this and all similar conference. This government's intentions are being kept under wraps.

At this particular point in the proceedings it is safe to say that the conferees at Dumbarton Oaks know more about what the United States stands for than the 135,000,000 citizens who must be sold on foreign policy to make it effectual. Secrecy on foreign policy is a chronic weakness, not an acute attack which has occurred at Dumbarton Oaks.

Sticking to the Point

Words are being thrown like firecrackers at an old fashioned Fourth of July to conceal the main point at issue in the congressional investigation of Sidney Hillman's Political Action Committee. There is some danger that the investigators, themselves, may have become confused.

It does not matter how much or how little money Mr. Hillman's committee has raised or intends to raise. Nor as far as the main question is concerned, does it matter whether the money is used to get out the vote, or to get a first mortgage on the Democratic party; that is the Democratic party's business.

The people's business—and therefore the business of the congressional investigators—is to determine whether or not the law of the United States against political contributions by labor unions is being broken by Political Action Committee. In the course of finding that out, the investigators also would find out something else of vital interest to many members of CIO, of which Mr. Hillman is a vice president. They would find out how the "voluntary contributions" which now produce the committee's funds are contributed in the first instance and spent in the second instance.

The special house committee making the inquiries into these matters isn't expected to decide on the fine points of labor politics, which apparently is what Mr. Hillman would prefer to discuss, but to determine whether or not the groups it investigates, including CIO Political Action Committee, are violating the corrupt practices act.

Administration In Flux

One repercussion of the WPB shakeup which will get the attention it deserves in the presidential campaign is the evidence furnished of an administration in flux. Mr. Roosevelt's bid for a fourth term will be subject to appraisal on a basis of the changes made and about to be made in his official family.

It is apparent, for instance, that WPB from this point forward will not be the same agency it has been during its period of distinguished service. Substitution of Sen. Truman for Henry Wallace in the vice presidency has been another public indication of change, and another is the persistent rumor that James F. Byrnes, administrator of office of war mobilization, is carrying his resignation in his pocket.

Harry Hopkins is reported to be back on active duty as head White House confidante. As the war emphasis on the military departments declines, attention will be focused again on two points in the official family which have been neglected—the departments of labor and agriculture. This will be part of a more general process of shifting interest which will disclose that the disintegration of Mr. Roosevelt's patchwork war administration is going to leave him without even a patchwork peacetime administration.

There is destined to be another scramble for influence like the one just witnessed in the case of WPB. Under the circumstances, voters next November will be confronted with a choice between Gov. Dewey's prospectus of an administration manned by experts in administering and Mr. Roosevelt's prospectus of four more years of government by improvisation.

The same rule holds in wartime: people who are on the level often get to the top.

How do the girls manage to keep thumbs on over those long fingernails?

The Stars Say

For Friday, September 1

AN UNFORESEEN occurrence may quite suddenly and dramatically turn the course of events into entirely new channels with fresh experiences, changed motives, ambitions, even environments and associations. While this may open up the prospect of expansive and unprecedented scope for progress, production or other dynamic achievement, there may be need for particular precaution, conservatism and practical performance in order to capture the highest advantage possible. Duplicity, intrigues, and under-cover doings, menace, and might even thwart the keen insight of an illuminated and shrewd mind. Shun impetuous or emotional decisions.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it may expect an important and significant year, in which there is scope for great expectations of a dramatic and startling crisis. But such sudden visitation should be handled with sound judgment, shrewd weighing in the balance of conflicting factors, since there are undercurrents treacherous and intriguing. The mind is attuned to subtlety, being keen, astute and intuitive, but stimulated impulses and emotions may incite to unwise decisions or unfruitful tactics. The romantic affiliations are subject to similar false moves and conclusions. Be alert to all forms of subtlety.

A child born on this day will possess much inventive skill and ingenuity, with a keen mentality, but may lose through trickery of craft, although it may also gain in some spectacular or unusual channel.

War has quietly taken away that comfortable feeling of the permanence and solidity of ordinary customs and events. Probably few people noted the feeling when it was present or consciously missed it when it went. We certainly hadn't until we read that New York fashion designers are already planning to go back to Paris, and that preparations are underway for the world premiere of a Hollywood picture in France this winter. Suddenly it all came back to us. We knew how Noah must have felt when the dove returned with the olive branch.

With more women in politics than ever you'd be surprised at some of the hats tossed into the ring.

America, England, Russia, China—we're hoping that quartet can produce world harmony.

The man who coined the expression "dirt cheap" should have lived so long as to talk to a real estate operator now.

Now that the girls are driving taxis shouldn't we revise that old saw about death and taxes?

Getting wrong numbers makes you wonder how phone operators ever succeed at their calling.

Some of the folks who claim to have open minds ought to close up a while for repairs.

Killing time is the easiest way to murder opportunities.

Some married men soon learn that it's perfectly logical for a woman to be illogical.

The heroes that really count are the ones who go right on being brave when nobody is looking.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backaches quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys. The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people about 3 pints a day. When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder. Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

THE REST OF MY LIFE WITH YOU

by Faith Baldwin

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Judith managed to talk to Irene about motion-picture studios. . . . she thought of Matthew. . . . it had to be. That's why nothing else, no one else, was satisfactory.

She was twenty-three years. Grown-up, or so she had fancied. But she had not grown up until a moment ago. Girl into woman, as quickly as that, and more painfully than she could ever have imagined. Presently Judith was able to say, "I'm afraid I must leave now. I'm going out to dinner." She smiled at Irene. "Thanks for letting me come. It was such fun."

What am I saying? she thought suddenly.

Matthew was speaking. He was asking, "Where are you going? Maybe it's my way."

She could not look at him, she hated not Judith thought, with a sudden aching sorrow: Not you, Matthew, never your way.

She named her hotel, and he said cheerfully, "Right up my alley. I'll drop you off."

"That's just what he will do," remarked his mother resignedly. "If you aren't careful, demon driver, Irene said instantly. 'He's a very nice driver, really, Judith.' She looked up smiling and Judith, looking at her as if for the first time, saw that her eyes were beautiful with patience and hope. "You needn't be afraid," Judith asserted eagerly.

"I'm not afraid," Judith asserted eagerly.

"I'm safe all right," said Matthew, consoling. "Come along, Judy. Your dinner date won't mind being kept waiting but my patient will miss Cain. How about you, mother?"

"I'm staying for dinner," Matthew stammered. "Judy, will you get going?"

Judith kissed Mary and took Irene's hand. She said, "I'll see you soon, I hope," and somehow escaped from the pleasant room with the firelight and its air of waiting intimacy. But it was not escape. For Matthew was beside her, with all that same lovable, exasperating assurance which years ago had sent her tagging at his heels, grateful for a word or a command.

He had his hand on her arm and she held herself completely rigid, determined not to pay any attention to it, not to feel, not to think. They went outside where the wind blew chilly and wet, the lazy flakes came down and melted. And Matthew said, taking her toward the car, "Don't slip! No, do slip. I have a way with ankles." He laughed and added, "Some buffalo robe you have there."

It was a mink coat, dark, silky, and Ella's latest Christmas gift. The snow stung Judith's eyelids— "It's all that stuff due to snow!"— and settled briefly on her bright brown hair and little cap of mink. She said, "Aunt Ella's very generous."

"Who's her doctor?" smiled Matthew.

He put her in the car and they started for the hotel. He drove too fast, but she was not afraid; not of driving, nor of the slithering streets nor the startled policemen. One stopped them and Matthew said, his license ready, "I'm on a call."

The officer looked dubiously at Judith, shook his head, then said, "I'm warning you, doc," and let them go on.

"I can get out of anything," boasted Matthew complacently, and she could have killed him.

He talked of Irene on the way to the hotel. He talked of his mother and of his work. He talked without embarrassment, of the baby.

"Seems silly, doesn't it?" he chattered. "Me with a kid!"

Judith said, a little tartly, "It doesn't seem silly to Irene."

"Oh, women!" exclaimed Matthew, dismissing them with tolerant affection. "She and mother drive me nuts! So many dozens of this, so many dozens of that. Twice in a life a man is completely submerged on his wedding day and his cheek against her own and saying, "You're much too alluring. I think of you too much. When are we seeing each other again?"

It was very late when Judith reached home. Anna had laid out her nightgown, her robe and slippers. There was a special delivery from Dan. . . . poor Dan, dear Dan! There were flowers from someone else. And a note from her mother on the pillow. "Dear, I hope you had a good time, do sleep late."

Judith sat in front of the mirror and, while patting in the cream, thought: What's the use. What a crazy life every day you put your face on and take it off, half a dozen times maybe.

I'm pretty, she thought. I'm young. . . . Dan loved my face — others have too. I have a good figure. I'm young and terribly healthy. I'll live for years and years. Years. She'd forget, perhaps very soon. Perhaps this was like some swift and sudden illness, striking without warning, leaving you limp and weak, then convalescent and at last cured.

Judith went to bed and the traffic noises reached her, there on the eighteenth floor. Suddenly, an ambulance lifted its shrill compelling voice. . . . Ambulance, hospitals, doctors, Matthew. It all came back to him, after all.

I've known him forever, and I don't know him at all, Judith told herself. He thinks of me as a kid. Why shouldn't he? He's married. He's been married for three years. He's in love with his wife. . . . (To be continued)

Recipe for a Perfect Marriage

Dee and Jane Cuppers celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary last Saturday. Having so many friends, it seemed like half the town stopped in that evening to pay their respects.

Little Ida Moffat brought a home-made poem to read, called "Love Enduring. Bert Childers fiddled "Silver Threads Among the Gold." Will Dudley made a speech and proposed a toast.

And as I watched that toast—Dee with his glass of beer, Jane with her buttermilk—I thought to myself: There's a recipe for happy marriage. Two folks with different tastes—no doubt an honest fault or two—who through the years have learned to live in tolerance and understanding.

From where I sit, Dee and Jane are a mighty good example to young married people of today—an example of how moderation, tolerance and understanding can build lasting happiness and solid homes.

She'd rather say "Yes!"

● These days your telephone service representative has to say "No" and "There'll be a long delay."

She would like to say "Yes" and "We'll put your telephone service in today."

But war has first right to telephone facilities and materials. Next comes service essential to public health and security. The equipment remaining for normal civilian use is jammed to the absolute limit. And there's a long, long line waiting for what few facilities are released by disconnections.

In many of these cases the wait for telephone service may last as long as the war or longer, as the close of the war will not solve our telephone problems.

That's why, today, your telephone representative must say "No" so often. But she's doing her level best to get service for you as soon as she possibly can.

If you have any questions about telephone service she will be pleased to have you come in and talk them over or you may call her.

GUARDING YOUR HEALTH

A Vaccination Schedule

Dr. LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D., TO SUMMARIZE what we have been saying this week about preparing the children for the school year, so far as their health is concerned, the first duty is to be sure they are protected as far as possible against contagious and infectious diseases. Because with the beginning of school the child goes out into the great world, of new ideas, of new companions and, unfortunately, of a brand new set of germs.

While at home and playing in the neighborhood he has some contact with germs, but he has gotten used to them. He has developed immunity to his home and neighborhood germs. At school, with a thousand new contacts from other homes and other neighborhoods, he is up against germs that he isn't conditioned to yet.

We cannot protect him against all of them. We wish, for instance, we could protect him against mumps and measles. We can with certainty, however, protect the child of five or six years against smallpox, diphtheria and typhoid fever. The schedule is:

Smallpox—Vaccinate at 9 months of age. Repeat at 6 years.

Diphtheria—Give toxoid at 12 months, with a Schick test to see if immunity has run out at 6 years.

Typhoid fever—Vaccinate at 5 to 10 years of age. Repeat in 10 years.

The fear that any of these vaccines will do harm is very remote—non-existent for diphtheria and typhoid. Complications more or less serious occur with smallpox vaccination, but with modern methods of tissue culture of the vaccine they have been almost completely eliminated. At worst they occur in less than one-tenth of one per cent of all children vaccinated. Mostly they are allergic skin reactions, of no serious consequence.

For two other diseases we have methods of prevention that, while not proved to be 100 per cent effective, are sufficiently so that they can be recommended. They are:

Whooping cough—Vaccination should be done at 6 months of age.

Scarlet fever—Vaccination should be done at 3 to 4 years of age.

Given in five doses, five to 10 days apart.

Personally, and that is the final test, I can say that if I had children of school age I would unhesitatingly give them the benefit of these whooping cough and scarlet fever vaccinations. They are certainly completely harmless, and both diseases are always serious, and only too often fatal. If any protection can be given against them, it should be tried even if it is not complete and certain.

Report on New Vaccines

As to how complete and certain the protection is I find the latest report on whooping cough in the Journal of the American Medical Association in 1941 by workers from Michael Reese Hospital, Chicago. It represents a very thorough piece of work. Briefly, it reports that 379 children varying in age from 6 months to 5 years were inoculated with five doses of whooping cough vaccines. Fifty-eight of these children were subsequently known to have been exposed to whooping cough and nine developed the disease. In a control group of 47 unvaccinated children were exposed to whooping cough and 37 developed the disease.

Scarlet fever varies in contagiousness and virulence so much in different epidemics that no statistics having dogmatic value can be found. A suggestion still on trial is that simultaneous immunizations to smallpox, diphtheria and typhoid should be given. Such have been given with no more reaction than observed with any one, but the procedure is still experimental.

HOW OFTEN

Best answer we can find is the reply given by Pie Traynor to a similar query from Scribe Don Pierce during the recent Kansas coaching school at Topeka: "The Majors are looking for a supply source. Obviously, they have to have this or go out of existence, when they see a good-looking kid, naturally they go after him. If the high schools and colleges would develop a sharp program of baseball, the majors would lay off signing kid ball players. They would Perhaps Pie was simplifying the matter a bit, for the colleges can't, or won't expend a lot of time or money developing good ball players only to see them snatched up before their "payoff" seasons and the pros won't stop snatching until they're offered some plan that will assure them that the kids they now sign out of high schools will get a good baseball education if they stay in school and that when they spot a good prospect someone else won't snatch him first.

DEMINGS-CHINA CLASH

ger on the team with a 325 average.
On the other side of the fence is the China and their star hurler, Dale Ritchie. The veteran moundsman also boasts a powerful bat, with an average of .304, and he has no peer when it comes to fielding play.

Ritchie, supported by a more powerful all-around team than Brudersly, has posted 19 wins against five losses this year. Two of those losses came at the hands of the Dover team that appeared here last week, and another pair from the Salem News. The fifth loss was handed out by Demings in fourth round play, 1-0.

By far the most effective hurler in the league this season, Ritchie has been all this week and didn't win in the two games the China won.

Nazis Acknowledge Slovakian Uprisings

(By Associated Press)

Berlin acknowledged today that a revolutionary movement had broken out in its puppet state of Slovakia and that some garrisons had deserted.

The official German news agency, DNB, said riots occurred at several places in Slovakia and quoted a German foreign office spokesman as saying they could be traced to activity of partisans and agents of Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia.

DNB said the outbreaks "had the character of Bolshevik terror" starting with murder of priests and violation of women.

The agency reported that Joseph Tiso, president of Slovakia, had appealed to Germany for aid and that it had been given.

Czecho-Slovak sources in London had announced the uprising yesterday and said it was the work of the Czecho-Slovak forces of the interior. The London announcement said the forces had launched concerted attacks in several areas against important communications points.

DNB said Tiso addressed an appeal to soldiers and farmers "upon whose initiative the action was started." It quoted "Berlin circles" as predicting "an early end of the riots and punishment of those responsible for them."

REPORT REDS

While the Red army was knocking at the gates of Bucharest, a Romanian peace delegation in Moscow prepared for initial talks with the Russians.

The lightning advance by Gen. Malinovsky's army captured an additional 15,000 Germans Tuesday, including a corps commander, a divisional commander, and two colonels commanding divisions, the Soviet communiqué said.

German losses in the unsuccessful defense of Ploesti were declared tremendous.

Gen. Feodor I. Tolbukhin's Third army captured 100 towns in the pocket between the Danube river bends and the Black sea.

His army moved rapidly upon the Bulgarian border from positions south of the Danube through Dobruja. His right arm reached down the Danube valley through Wallachia in thrusts which promised to link up with Marshal Tito's forces in Serbia.
